Description

This is a wonderful site for all levels of divers and snorkelers alike, offering a quiet scenic beach to relax. Willibrordus, just follow the signs and the dirt road to the parking lot, where you pay a small fee to park at a snack bar. You can gear up in the parking lot, a very short walk from the water.

Enter at the beach and swim straight out towards the mooring buoy, a hundred yards from shore. Current shallows you'll see what look to be giant hollow golf balls, called reef balls. These were placed to help stabilize Lenny in 1999. The reef balls seem to be working well; they're placed along a snorkel trail, making for a

Porto Mari offers a unique double reef dive, with a hundred foot wide, fifty foot deep sandy valley separating inside this valley, diving the outside of the first reef and the inside of the second reef.

Spotted Snake Eels can often be found buried in the sand, with Triggerfish, Squirrelfish, Goatfish, and C

The outside of the second reef runs from 30 feet to below 130 feet; it's in very good shape with Gorgonian wide sandy channels that run 120 feet deep; keep an eye on your depth gauge while crossing. Barracuda area.

The dive site has two forms of spelling, Porto Marie and PortoMari. This is intentional. Originally the spelling was Porto Marie, but over the years, the name was changed to Plantages "Porto Mari". The beach area is now known as Playa "Porto
